

ACROBATIC FEATS SAVE MANY AT FIRE

Tenants of Blazing Theatrical Boarding House Owe Lives to Skill.

TWENTY PERSONS HURT

Firemen Make Thrilling Rescues From Building in West 44th Street.

In an early morning fire yesterday at a theatrical boarding house at 155 West Forty-fourth street twenty persons were burned or otherwise injured in scenes described as many thrills as a movie director could pack into five reels. Such a fire in any usual boarding house would almost surely have caused a large loss of life, that no one was killed yesterday was due to the work of professional acrobats among the tenants.

Some scaled the walls, front and rear, climbing by their toes and fingernails, until they reached safety; others made awesome jumps from the windows to an extension in front or knotted their bed clothes hurriedly into life ropes and descended hand under foot to the ground.

Human Chain Saves Women.
The biggest thrill was that afforded by James Moore, an actor, and George Murray, an acrobat. From the roof Moore held Murray by the heels until his fingers touched Mrs. Moore's, leaning out a top floor window, she leaped and caught his wrists, and from this perilous position Moore hauled them both to the roof and safety.

The building owned by May Irwin and the boarding house is conducted by William J. Blalock and his wife Jane. East Washington's Birthday a fire in the house caused the death of five persons. Most of the theatrical occupants of the house had dropped off into their first sound sleep when a bellhop of the Claridge saw flames shooting through the lower floor at twenty minutes after 8 o'clock. He turned in an alarm, but the flames spread so fast that the interior of the house was engulfed when the firemen arrived.

Make Rush to the Roof.
Men and women in their night attire were awakened on the fourth floor. Some had shot upward through the halls and there was little hope for escape that way. A few of those on the top floors were able to get to the roof. Others, crowded at the front windows, clambered from a top floor window down to the front extension. John Sturgeon, an actor, made a life line out of a sheet and had climbed to the roof in ten feet of the ground when it broke. Mr. and Mrs. Blalock, aided by William Hale, who occupied a room on the third floor near their, after jumping to the extension roof crawled along the top of the building while the crowd gasped until they reached the window of the house next door, where they were assisted inside.

Chauffeurs Aid Rescue.
Meanwhile the firemen and chauffeurs were running up ladders. Miss Rita Zimlin of the Russian Ballet and her mother were on the fourth floor, screaming that they were about to jump. The firemen induced them to wait while the ladders were going up. Arthur Krause, a taxi driver, crawled out the fourth floor window of the house next door, shined along the house front until he reached the women, and aided them, one at a time, back to No. 155. Firemen carried a number of men and women down the ladders. Policeman Daniel Eberle carried Mrs. Frank Moran into the house, and the mother of the house at the fourth floor level. Those injured were Mary Halmon, Mrs. Laura Murray, her son Robert, Mrs. Mary Blalock, and her daughter. They were taken to Polytechnic Hospital. Others were treated on the spot.

Mrs. Blalock notified the police that $4,000 worth of jewelry which she kept under her pillow was missing. William Hale reported that his watch and ring, valued at $125, had been stolen.

POISON IN BAR BOTTLES.

Saloon Porter Admits He Tried to Slay His Employer.
When being put through the third degree by the Hoboken police yesterday Frank Klein, a porter in Heintzman's saloon, 136 Bloomfield street, that city, volunteered the information that several days ago he had emptied a vial of arsenic acid into three bottles of liquor in the saloon where he was employed. Klein was arrested charged with burglary. He had been caught in the act of putting the vegetable store of Joseph Verlage, 134 Bloomfield street. Following his confession the police obtained from Heintzman a bottle of port, a bottle of vermouth and a bottle of brandy. Klein said these were the bottles into which he had put the murd'rous acid. None of the bottles had been used, according to Heintzman, although there had been constant danger that they would be put out over the bar.

Klein said he had wanted to kill Heintzman because Mrs. Heintzman had to work for her husband too hard. Heintzman's death would have lightened her burden Klein thought. Klein was charged with burglary, petty larceny, grand larceny and with attempt to kill. The larceny charges concern other parts of his confession, in which he admitted having stolen goods from a number of shopkeepers in his vicinity.

WILL HOLD CONFERENCE

Directors of Agricultural Colleges to Be at Albany for Gathering.

ALBANY, Dec. 9.—In order to obtain a statewide expression of opinion on the question of legislation for the upbuilding of agriculture and increasing production, Commissioner of Agriculture Charles S. Wilson has called a conference, to be held in the Senate Chamber Wednesday, December 20. All who are interested and have suggestions to make are invited.

"In addition to suggestions on legislation," said Commissioner Wilson, "there will be opportunity for a discussion of production problems which confront agriculture. The directors of our agricultural schools and colleges will attend the conference to aid in the discussion of these problems."

Commissioner Wilson pointed out that it is estimated that there are some 2,000,000 acres of land in New York State which produce practically nothing. This land may be abandoned land, the Commissioner said, but simply for one reason or another it is not cultivated nor used for cattle or sheep raising. He said it was safe to say that almost all of this land could be made productive. The question of devising plans by which a beginning may be made in accomplishing this may come up at the conference.

Urges Rotation of Crops.
"The soil in this land which is not worked now could easily be made productive with proper rotation of crops and with the application of fertilizer. Some of the land is now in good shape for cultivation."

"It is true that it is difficult to get labor on the farm just at this time because of demand by manufacturers. The labor problem is one of the serious features of the whole question."

"As the department has pointed out before, the shipping facilities in New York State give it an advantage over other States, as well as the proximity of the world's greatest market place, New York City. One suggestion which has been made is to provide for the cultivation of land now uncultivated in an advertising campaign showing the agricultural advantages of land in this State."

It was explained by the Commissioner that prices for farm produce now are different from those received some years ago when the exodus from the farm began. "In the State of New York in 1915," he said, "there were approximately 2,500,000 acres. At that time the average income was $125 from each acre. To-day the average amount realized is $10, and the last census shows 500,000 sheep in the State."

Plight on Tuberculosis.
Commissioner Wilson said that another problem which would come up for discussion would be the elimination of tuberculosis from the State. At the 1915 session of the Legislature a bill designed to foster sheep raising was introduced. It provided for such a law on tuberculosis as would be eliminated and others better controlled. It has been held that dogs are the most serious handicap to the industry. The legislative committee of the State Agricultural Society will be represented at the conference and is cooperating in arrangements for it.

FIGHTS BIRD KILLING PLAN.

Audubon Society Says Work Would Be Harmful for Boy Scouts.

The plan to have a week next spring set aside for the extermination of the English sparrow and to enlist the services of boy scouts and other children in the work of killing these birds meets a protest from the New Jersey Audubon Society.

"Wholesale killing of birds by children, whose characters are peculiarly sensitive to impressions received at such a stage in their lives," says the society's protest, "even though such killing be confined to a species understood to be misplaced and undesirable, cannot in our estimation have other than a very detrimental effect on such child characters."

Moreover, there is not more than one in 100 of our adult population who is able to certainly identify the English sparrow from native species and other children in such a crusade as that proposed would almost surely result in a destruction of valuable native birds, the evil effect of which would far more than offset any possible advantage resulting from English sparrow killing.

"Any effort looking to the destruction of the English sparrow in this country should be under a carefully formulated plan whereby the work should be carefully done by experienced persons fully capable of discriminating between the foreign and native species and preferably by means of traps, so that the birds caught could be handled and examined and the native birds caught liberated unharmed."

"In addition to suggestions on legislation," said Commissioner Wilson, "there will be opportunity for a discussion of production problems which confront agriculture. The directors of our agricultural schools and colleges will attend the conference to aid in the discussion of these problems."
